Fort Ann, NY

Two early forts were called "Fort Schuyler" and the "Queen's Fort." Also, Fort Ann was the site of the 1777 Battle of Fort Anne during the Saratoga Campaign. The village was incorporated in 1820. In 1759, Whitehall was settled in a valley at the southern end of Lake Champlain. This colonial town was founded by British Army Captain Philip Skene, and was originally known as Skenesboro. Skenesboro became the first settlement on Lake Champlain and was a center of maritime trade. Captain Skene built saw mills, grist mills and an iron foundry, where trade can be documented from that time. The Revolutionary War caused the capture of Skene's trading schooner and the building of a fleet by Benedict Arnold at this place. Because of the Revolutionary War actions, the New York State Legislature, in 1960, declared the legacy that names Whitehall as the Birthplace of the United States Navy. The Whitehall harbor also produced ships used for service by the U.S. Navy during the War of 1812.

Skene Manor, overlooking Whitehall is an old manor on the historical registry and is open for tours and lunch.

Putnam's famous quote "don't shoot until you see the whites of their eyes, then shoot low" is still well known today.

Ticonderoga, NY

The history of Ticonderoga NY is well-known mostly due to the prominence of Fort Ticonderoga, the site of many bloody battles during the French and Indian War and then again during the Revolutionary War. Built by French settlers in 1755 and originally called Fort Carillon, the fort sits high, overlooking the LaChute River, which connects Lake George and Lake Champlain. Because it offered access to Canada and the Hudson River Valley, this highly strategic location was highly desired by the French, British, and Americans during both 18th century wars. Ticonderoga was derived from an Iroquois word meaning “between two waters.”

In 1759, British forces laid siege and took control over it from the small camp of French soldiers that were left to watch over it. The British renamed it Fort Ticonderoga. In 1775, Ethan Allen, Benedict Arnold, and the Green Mountain Boys, a Vermont rebel militia, attacked the sleeping fort and captured the British soldiers there. This would be the first rebel victory of the Ti Mill Revolutionary War. In 1777, the British regained control of Fort Ticonderoga and a few months later abandoned it. While Ticonderoga's famous history is well-known mostly for its historic fort, the 19th century also helped to earn Ticonderoga merit in history. Ore was discovered on Lead Mountain in 1815 and a local entrepreneur bought the patent for lead pencils and built the American Graphite Company, which made the Ticonderoga Pencil famous.
